

The Knights of the Red Branch of Zarah

16 Sep 2004

There is one missing piece of the puzzle that people need to know about and that is the feud in the Royal Lineage of Judah.

You will recall that Tamar bore twin sons to Judah - Pharaz and Zarah. In the process of the birth, Zarah stuck out his hand, the midwife tied a red ribbon around his wrist, he pulled his hand back in and lo and behold Pharaz was born first.

This set up a debate in the lives of these two boys who subsequently contested the Royal Birthright. History shows, of course, that Pharas won out and the Davidic Throne and Y'shua's legal right to the same were the direct result.

However, what most people don't know is that this dispute was so intense that Zara decided to pick up roots, leave the Israeli Camp, and relocate to the British Isles where he set up his own Monarchy.

You will recall that Joseph was basically the ruler of Egypt and the ancient world (which they ruled) received its tin from the Isles, so it is not too hard to believe that Zarah was probably given some type of Land Grant or License to supply Egypt with tin from the Isles and this subsequently resulted in the 'loss' of half of the Royal Tribe.

This can be proven from the Word in two ways. First is that in the Royal Chronologies, the lineage of Zarah disappears from the list after only the third generation - his grandson (1 Ch 2:6-8). If Zara remained with the Camp, he would have had more descendants listed, since he was one of the two Royal Twins. The fact that he only has five sons listed and only one grandson strongly indicates that he picked up his entire family and moved away.

Further though is this. In the blessings of Moses on Judah (Dt 33:7), instead of tying it back into the blessing of Jacob (Gen 49) as he did with most of the other tribes, he said these cryptic words, "Hear, Y'hava, the voice of Judah, and bring him unto his people - let his hand be sufficient for him; and be thou an help to him from his enemies."

Now, this blessing would have fallen on both of the two sons of Judah and I have already shown how this will be fulfilled in the life of Pharas (it must be interpreted Messianically - where "bring" can be interpreted as "return"), however, what I never realized is how this will be fulfilled in the life of Zara for it is this very absence of Zara from the Israeli community that prompted these words from Moses in the first place. Moses realized that in the end days Zara would play an important part, and that this would require his preservation by the Lord and subsequent return to his people.

And, this prayer, by the way, was wonderfully fulfilled in the life of William the Conqueror even to particulars for he was 1) Separated by his brothers during the years he grew up in Normandy, 2) The Lord heard his voice in request of help with his enemies when he was about to ascend the throne and the Lord sent a storm that shipwrecked his enemy who was subsequently arrested and turned over to William, 3) Strengthened his arms so that, during a long period of stormy weather, as he was planning on conquering England, he was able to keep his army together during the interim, which one author said was extremely unusual for the time and, 4) The Lord gave him victory over his enemies and he was able to establish himself on the throne.

However, we also have proof of this in the Science of Heraldry and that is through the Symbol prevalent in Scotland and that is the Hand clenching a Sword with a Red Ribbon tied around it. This Heraldic Crest would only be claimed by someone from the loins of Zara. In fact, according to Bennett, this is actually the origins for the Red Ribbon in the Union Jack of England and, assuredly, the Red Ribbon in the Standards of most, if not all, of the Anglo-Saxon nations.

The Monarchy, with the Stone of Scone, was originally established in Ireland and from there moved to Scotland and finally England, but it can be traced all the way back to its founding in Ireland, through Zara around 1700 BC. And, this is the origins for the Red Hand of Ulster, another Heraldic Crest.

Also, the King had a Royal Bodyguard with him when he went, or after he was established in the Isles that can also be traced back to this time and that is The Royal Order of the Knights of the Red Branch who had sworn an oath to protect the Royal Lineage of Zara. It is the oldest (and in my opinion the most prestigious) Military Order on record.

I believe that when the British Monarchy tried to claim the Davidic Birthright that sometime subsequently this Order must have gone underground because they would have been living proof that the Monarchy in the Isles was that of Zara and not Pharas. Unfortunately, that is about all I have been able to find out about them, and that through books I got from Artisan Sales.

One other interesting theory on this is that I believe that the origins for the extremely ancient Symbol now known as the Star of David was very possibly a result of the birth of these two boys.

Editor's Note January 18, 2022 Anno Domini

I became a Knight of Columbus in the Summer of 2009 and sometime after that I realized that this is the direct lineal descendant of the Knights of the Red Branch.

About the time the Red Branch disappeared, lo and behold, the Knights of Columbus 'landed' at New Haven, Connecticut in 1882 AD under the Initiation by an Irish Priest (note the Red Ribbon in the Crest he chose) by the name of McGivney.

The reason for the choice of Columbus is because he also sailed out past the Pillars of Hercules as did Zara before him.

I highly encourage all you Catholic Boyz to become initiates because it is a Church Sanctioned Branch of Ancient Predynastic Masonry which is the religion for Warriors (complete with inspiration via a type or ordination) that Enoch was initiated into and possibly Y'shua also via his uncle Joseph of Arimathea who founded the Church in Glastonbury.
